Not illustrated. 1830 Excerpt: .respect,) than to avoid one or the other of these errors; or to say to that appetite, little less than canine, thus far shalt thou go, and no farther. Habitual costiveness is a cause of indigestion too well known to require much notice here. From what has been said heretofore, it will be easily understood why a deviation from the healthy performance of function in one part of the alimentary canal, should soon involve the rest; and why the stomach, from the intimate connexion which exists among all the digestive organs, will not be long in responding to any irregularity of the bowels. There is but one more physical cause which I shall mention, and that has been set down by Europeans as the opprobrium of Americans; I mean the chewing of tobacco. Though this loathsome practice is undoubtedly fast decreasing among the higher orders ofsoef ety, and cannot be said to be peculiar to us, it is yet far more general here than in any other equally civil. -2ed country. This poisonous plant is injurious when chewed in considerable quantity, by the great waste of saliva it occasions, by impairing the appetite and giving rise to tremblings, watchfulness, and other symptoms indicative of its effects upon the nervous system. It is thought by many, that tobacco cannot be hurtful because thousands are constantly using it without any apparent evil consequences; but this fact only shows what a good constitution will bear, without any more...
