PART I. CHAPTER I. THE GENERAL CONDITION OF THE FENS, AND HOW THEY BECAME SILTED UP. A Reference to the Maps which are prefixed will show the geographical position of the Fens. It will be seen that the district is bounded on all parts by History highlands, in the form of a horse-shoe, which makes c. 33, p. 172. it like a bay, from that point of land about Hunstanton in Norfolk to Wyntonhorpe in Lincolnshire. The general condition of all parts of the low country, the various strata which underlie the surface, and the objects which are discovered in them, sufficiently prove that during the lapse of ages great changes in the surface have taken place, that the level has materially altered, that forest-trees / once grew there luxuriantly, and that the climate, the flora, and the animals are entirely different from what they once were. Great numbers of trees have been dug up, such as oak and fir, which will not live in water. When the Wisbeach river was deepened, the workmen found, eight feet below the then bottom, which was stony, several boats within short distances of each other, which had been overwhelmed by the silt for many ages. So likewise at Salter s Lode, at the digging of the foundation of the fosse, the silt was found to be ten feet deep, and next below it, three feet of fen moor, then bluish...
