Createspace. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 238 pages. A searching critique of our ideas about human evolution, this book offers a new theory that helps to explain why man is so different from other species. The Author demonstrates how recall and memory played a vital part in mankind's evolutionary dominance, to the detriment of all other species. Recall was born in man and changed him completely. It may have been a mutation, the result of a beta radiation hit on a particular gene around 5-7 million years ago. At that time recall enabled man to grasp the difference between before and after. So the affect he himself had on the environment became apparent. He was able to fashion tools in a manner far superior to anything any other creature could accomplish, even our close primate cousins. Flint, bone and skins from other animals allowed him to imitate the claws, teeth and strong hides of far larger predators. So man side-stepped evolution. He became, in the Author's definition, a pseudo species. The prime characteristic of a pseudo species is that normal evolution is by-passed. Evolution takes place in the abstract, unaffected by physical effects of the environment, quite unlike the process described by Charles Darwin. Thus Man's progress is accelerated by the abstract nature of our pseudo environment, using number, writing, computing, diagrams and, above all, language. These abstract tools are passed quickly to new members of the species. They exist outside time, indestructible and easily accessible. No other species deploys these distinctly human resources in the effort to survive. But the author argues these very resources lead mankind into a series of delusions. The first of these is that he feels himself superior to other inhabitants of Earth. Second he imagines a world that...
