In a large tree the center of the trunk is darker in color, and harder than the outer part. The center is called heart wood, and makes better lumber than the outer or sap wood. Grain Marks on Wood.--In some kinds of wood the marks made by each year s growth show more plainly than they do in other woods. When wood is sawed the circles are cut across and appear as grain marks on the boards. In order to show the grain marks, wood used for furniture, ceilings, and floors is often oiled or polished instead of being painted. Does the wood on your desk show any grain marks? Are there any grain marks on the floor or on the walls of the schoolroom? By these marks you can tell what kind of wood you have. Of what wood is your desk made? How...
