Grafting On Bonte.--Following sequestrotomy and other bone operations much time is often consumed in healing. A few judiciously applied skin grafts will, however, frequently hasten convalescence, although they are less likely to take than under most other circumstances. Even the entire orbit may be lined with epithelium after the removal of a malignant growth, as was successfully done by von Noorden.<sup>28</sup> In some cases, where a smooth, clean surface can be obtained, transplantation may be done at once, although it is often preferable to wait until granulations have appeared, perhaps four to six weeks. When a gutter has been chiseled in the bone, it may be necessary to shove the grafts through quite a small opening, and much difficulty may be experienced in adjusting them smoothly. They may sometimes be held in place by packing the cavity with small pledgets of gauze. Even when success is but partial, the remainder of the surface is often stimulated to rapid healing. After the removal of exostoses, the bone may at once be covered with new skin with considerable assurance of a good result. Chronic Empyema.--In this troublesome affection it is sometimes necessary to remove portions of the chest wall in such a manner as to leave a large granulating cavity which is very slow in healing. Tillmanns, in 1890, demonstrated that such surfaces can be successfully grafted, and since then, the operation has been repeatedly done by others. Berl. Klin. Woch., 1892,...
